It's pretty hard to attend to duties with a constantly aching back. With annoying urinary disorders. Doan's Kidney Pills make work easier. They cure backache.

They cure every kidney ail.

Mrs. M. M. Nelson of 18 West street, Barre, Vt., says: "Doan's Kidney Pills, procured at E. A. Brown's drug store, eight years ago, benefited me so greatly that I gave for publication a statement telling of my satisfactory experience with them."

At that time a severe attack of the grip had left my kidneys in a weakened condition, and instead of getting better I grew worse. The slightest housework tired me and it on my feet much sharp pains caught me across my back and compelled me to stop and rest. Other complications came on and trouble with the kidney secretions set in. I paid out over a hundred dollars for doctors' bills and medicines, but got no relief. I was finally advised to try Doan's Kidney Pills and did so. I received relief from the first few doses and as I continued using the remedy the attack from which I was suffering was completely relieved. Since then I have never been without Doan's Kidney Pills in the house and have often used them, and always with the same beneficial results. I am always glad to recommend this reliable medicine to my friends and acquaintances."

NORTHFIELD

Horace Smith Lost a Finger in a Chain While Logging.

On last Thursday, Horace Smith had the misfortune to lose a finger on his right hand. He was trying to chain some logs on a sled when the horses started, the hook of the chain catching into his glove in such a way as to tear out of his fingers. Doctors Shaw and Winch were called to dress the wound. They found it necessary to remove the bone of the finger to the joint in the hand. Mr. Smith has suffered much pain but is getting along nicely.

Her Champion.

[Original.]

Miss Wedgewood, an American girl traveling abroad, found it necessary to journey from London to Paris attended only by her maid. On reaching Calais she was ushered into a compartment already occupied by two Englishmen who, from the dress and the airs they put on, might be London swells. Before the train started a third man entered, took a seat at the farther end of the compartment from Miss Wedgewood, opposite the two Englishmen, and taking periodicals and newspapers from his pocket, began to read. He did not even glance at Miss Wedgewood, who appreciated his not doing so inasmuch as the swells stared at her continually. No sooner had the train started than they began to discuss her in indifferent Spanish. Miss Wedgewood spoke French, German, Spanish and Italian. This is what they said, translated into London English:

"She's vevy pretty," said one.

"It's awdinary—she's American. I saw 'Cleveland' on her trunk. That's somewhere in America. I believe. They haven't the generations of refinement over there to make beauty."

"Look at the way she does her hair."

"And the hat. It's last season's make. I fancy she's rich, but not to fashion."

Miss Wedgewood noted a lowering on the brow of the gentleman sitting opposite her critics, indicating that he not only understood Spanish, but that their criticisms annoyed him. He held a newspaper before him so that the men opposite could not see his face, though it was visible to Miss Wedgewood, occupying a different position. He glanced aside as though desiring to satisfy himself of the justice of their strictures, but Miss Wedgewood, fortunately, she considered it was at the time just turning her eyes from his side of the coach to her own, assuming an imperious countenance, apparently unconscious of what was going on.

Suddenly the gentleman who was reading lowered his paper and addressed the critics in Spanish.

"Gentlemen, I am surprised that Englishmen, whom I judge by appearances to belong to the upper classes, should criticize a lady."

One of the men addressed apologized, stating that they had supposed no one in the compartment understood them. The other seemed inclined to resent the stranger's interference.

"I wish you to understand, sir," he said, "that a bit of private conversation between two gentlemen is not a matter for remark by a third person. You are very impudent to object. I would have you know, sir."

"Very well, sir," said the other, "proceed to make an end of yourself, only don't go so far as to force me to take the lady under my protection." And he resumed his reading.

The man who had last spoken resumed his remarks about Miss Wedgewood, making them far broader and bolder than before. Miss Wedgewood's champion again laid down his paper and said:

"The presence of the lady renders an insult impracticable. Will you kindly consider yourself insulted." And first glancing at Miss Wedgewood to see that she was not observant, he tossed his glove at the man; then, drawing a card from his pocket, handed it to him. Before looking at it the man handed him one of his own cards.

"Count Lichtenstein!" exclaimed the Englishman.

"And you, I perceive, are Lord Battersby. I will be ready to receive any friend your lordship may send at the Grand hotel within two hours after our arrival in Paris."

"I know you by reputation—the reputation you made at your university with the small sword—but as the challenged party I prefer pistols. I will teach you Germans, whose counts are as plentiful as tram drivers in London, that you can't have your own way with a British nobleman."

"Any weapon you prefer, Lord Battersby."

And the count resumed his reading as though nothing of consequence had happened. Battersby, undisturbed, continued his reading. The count agreed to a meeting at a spot near Versailles at 6 o'clock on the morning after their arrival in Paris. Battersby was to visit the count's friend, Edward Wedgewood, an American, and with him arrange the minor details.

The most astonishing part of this singular affair, every word of which Miss Wedgewood understood, was that her defender's second was to be her own brother. When the preliminaries were all settled she turned to the parties in question.

"Gentlemen," she said in excellent Spanish, "there is no occasion for this quarrel. If I needed to be championed, my brother, Mr. Wedgewood, would be the person to see me righted. Count Lichtenstein, now I think of it, I have heard my brother speak of you as a fellow student at Göttingen and of your exploits in fencing and marksmanship. I cannot permit you to shoot at any one on my account. Gentlemen, please consider this affair settled on pain of being called to account by the Parisian authorities."

If a bomb had exploded in the carriage it could not have produced more surprise and consternation than this little speech. One of the Englishmen, abashed, leaned back in his corner. The other looked very red, withdrew his glass from before his eye, wiped it and took up a novel lying beside him. Count Lichtenstein took a seat beside his friend's sister, and they conversed gayly, ignoring the others till they reached the capital, when the two parties separated. MARY C. PECK.

DIGGING FOR TOURMALINE.

How The Mines of Burma Are Worked For The Gem.

Tourmaline is a beautiful mineral known according to its color by the variety of names. The red is rubellite, the pale or bluish black is indicolite, the Berlin blue is called by jewelers Brazilian emerald, and so on.

Tourmaline is found in separate crystals in the interstices of hard granite-looking rock. As a consequence men with no means find it occasionally profitable when they have leisure to dig down eight or ten feet on the off chance of finding some not very valuable bits," says C. S. George, deputy commissioner, ruby mines district, Burma. "This system is called Kathie or Kathie system. After the idea of the original ruby diggers at Kathie. The next method is the ordinary Twinton method of sinking a vertical shaft about four or five feet square. By custom the owner of the shaft is entitled to extend his workings underground anywhere to a radius of five fathoms from the center of the shaft."

The vein is formed by a vein of white hard granite rock, in the interstices of which the tourmaline is found, at times adhering loosely to the rock, at others lying separate in the loose yellowish earth that is found with the granite. When a vein is once found it is followed up as far as possible, subject to the five fathom limit alluded to above. What, however, makes the mining so exciting and at the same time keeps the industry fluctuating is that tourmaline crystals are only found intermittently in the vein.

One may get several in the length of one yard, and then they will unaccountably cease. Directly one man strikes a vein yielding crystals, every one who can commence digging along the line of the vein, but it is all a toss up as to whether, when the vein is reached, there will be a tourmaline therein. Adjoining Twintons give absolutely different results, and it is calculated that at least two-thirds of the shaft sunk yield nothing at all, while only an occasional one is at all rich."

Of the sixty-two Twintons at the time of Mr. George's visit, only three were yielding, and of these only one had traces of the best quality stone. The "veins" are fairly deep down, none having ever been reached at a lower depth than nine fathoms, while an ordinary depth is forty or fifty cubits; when the "vein" takes a downward direction, it is followed as far as possible, but that is rarely over about sixty cubits for at that depth the fathoms of the air puts the lamps out.

"The vein is said rarely, if ever, to show an outcrop, and it is a matter of pure speculation where to dig," says Mr. George. As the whole place is covered with jungle, prospecting, anyway, would be laborious. There have been some finds, each causing a rush. The first was seven years ago at Hraik Baing (Milamgon), about nine miles to the south of the present place and near where the Chinese had worked formerly. The next was a year or two later at Htaukant, between Milamgon and Sanka.

There then were three or four lean years and then, early in 1905, one Konkan, struck a vein near Sanka village, which has attracted the present growth of population to Milamgon, but, as explained above, though the area within 100 yards of Konkan's original shaft is honeycombed with pits, only three are yielding, and Konkan's twin has ceased to yield. All the material dug out from the inside Twinton is pulled up to the surface in small buckets, all worked by enormously long pivoted bamboos worked with a counterpoise, and the tourmaline is sorted out in a wall around the mouth of the shaft.—London Globe.

A Cure for Misery.

"I have found a cure for the misery malaria poison produces," says R. M. James of Louellen, S. C. "It's called Electric Bitters, and comes in 30-cent bottles. It breaks up a case of chills or a bilious attack in almost no time; and it puts yellow jaundice clean out of commission." This great tonic medicine and blood purifier gives quick relief in all stomach, liver and kidney complaints and the misery of lame back.
